JUST VIEWS: a Free & Open Monthly Film & Discussion Program

Friday, Dec 12, 2008 at 7:20—Who Steers Auto & Fuel Choices

In the mid 90s, General Motors' gift to the public in response to California's wish was a fleet of pollution-free, (also soundless, zippy and spiffy) electric cars. They got rave reviews from all drivers. However, no one was allowed to buy an electric car. As soon as short leases expired, the electric cars were, in mint condition, all repossessed--and then crushed. The film and discussion tonight will probe some troubling questions: Did auto and/or oil companies kill the electric car? Earlier in the 1900s, what happened to the interurban street car lines stretching from the Atlantic to Chicago? Now, why is the increasing scarcity of oil on the planet not accepted and understood—and what are the implications?
